

FACTS AND QUOTES ABOUT CHRIS LAUFMAN (WISE BLOOD)

You should never trust a kid that acts like me.

he used to be a cemetery worker who endured a rough break-up with a partner

"We buried kids sometimes, in a part of the cemetery we called BabyLand"

On I'm Losing My Mind he's haunted by horrible memories from his previous employ ("I put kids six feet under") one of the tracks on his newly released Babyland EP pitches up Miley Cyrus' We Can't Stop vocals until she sounds like a microscopic witch.

the whole postmodern question of repurposing art

I operate best when someone's fucking with my emotional state.

how to make it sound bigger and cleaner but maintain its shambolic quality

It has big, suburban department stores that I've always loved; I'm attracted to that kind of thing. Strip malls, big parking lots. I'll find myself just going there and not buying anything. I've started recognizing that in myself.

I've started to crack the code.

this is possible only in usa(maybe). in my country he is a walking dead, he is already a corpse.

I'm in Pittsburgh, I'm staring at my phone, I'm laying on the ground. People are walking their dogs around me. They look unhappy but their dogs are loving life.

I think being religious is one of the hardest things
I could ever do, but I'm going to try.

Chris Laufman's Music Bio:

"Fuck What You Heard This is What I Know" - Manager

Formed in 2004 by Chris Nichols and Anna Fraszier, "Fuck What You Heard ..." quickly developed an exclusive audience thanks in large part to Chris Laufman. In 2005 they sold their 115 songs on e-bay for 100$. They ended up netting 50 buyers and a good amount of money. They played 3 live shows, each one equally awful. Their music can only be described as abstract soundscapes that are unenjoyable to listen to. Many who have heard them claim they did for the burgeoning lo-fi movement at the time what Ariel Pink did for polished, over produced Rock n' Roll. Chris Nichols died in 2006. Laufman has been commissioned to do a documentary on the bands influence on the few who have heard them. The release date is set for November 15th, 2012. It is titled "115".

"Guinea" - Drummer

Guinea was Chris Laufman's biggest mistake. In his own words the band was "a bunch of stupid assholes", "they should have been an L.A. band". In 2007 Chris Laufman was responsible for landing them a residency at the Carnegie Museum of Art. The premise was that they would perform each day in the same spot in the museum for 50 days. In these 50 days they would play interpretations of Jimi Hendrix's whole recorded catalog. "it was an incredible project, probably something i won't be able to convince a museum to support again, and i did it with a bunch of stupid assholes". Jim Holm, lead singer of Guinea, describes the concept as "fucking lame". Chris Laufman, who played drums in the band, was left to complete the project by himself. What resulted was a 3 hour tape of Laufman playing drums to every Jimi Hendrix song ever cataloged.

"Wise Blood" - Lead Vocals

The most internationally acclaimed of all of Chris Laufman's projects. In his own words "people love Wise Blood". Recently Wise Blood went on Tour with Friendly Fires and hung out with celebrities. Wise Blood's first EP "+" came out in mid 2010. Another EP, "These Wings", was released in September of 2011. For Wise Blood's full length debut Laufman says to expect "a concept album based on the 3 things that have influenced me the most profoundly in the past year". The release is slated for February of 2012, after which Laufman says to "expect the inevitable implosion of "Wise Blood""

Chris Laufman's Film Bio

"Here Come's That Bitch"

In late September of 2011 Laufman will star in a 10 minute, short film interpretation of his song "Loud Mouths" directed by Young Replicant.

My grandpa said I need some new shoes and I believe him, so I'm going to do that right now.

Where did you get your name Wise Blood?

Well, that was my name when I was a kid, I got it from there. I was just called Wise Blood, I didn't have a choice. That's my government name, actually.

Your government name? Yeah, it's Wise Blood, that's my official name. I give Chris Laufman sometimes, but that's my artist name. It's a complicated thing, people sometimes get that confused.

What do you mean? A lot of people think my official name is Chris Laufman and I go by Wise Blood, but it's the opposite.

Are you joking? [Laughing] Of course not, I'm not joking. Never.

I'm a pretty terrible person.

I hope I don't fit into anything, I'd rather not fit in anywhere.

When we were in North Dakota, just driving to Vancouver, we stopped and there were a bunch of bison. No one was around and this one bison almost killed me. I had scars all down my arms and all that.

I wore flannel to SXSW. It was the dumbest thing I've ever done.

The music I make transcends copyright, fuck that shit.

"We think it's heaven-sent" say the label

This group I was bound too... they were talking about their "bucket lists"... I have just one thing to do before I die... kill someone... I guess I never thought about how weird that was until the looks on their faces. But it's true. I would love to be the next Kavorkian. There's ways to kill people without being homicidal. Sissies. I've already got my list made out... so strike two on the "she's bound to be a serial killer" front. (Comment on Wise Blood's Facebook page - 9 mai 2012, 19:59 - Princess Rockula)
